These three steps are not only necessary to implement an effective and successful action plan, but they also provide a platform for great staff conversations and learning. The first step is to identify the most promising areas that the Action Team can immediately implement. During the planning phase, the team members will also assess the current status of the culture, and determine whether there are any areas that need to be addressed. For example, you might identify a new sales approach that can improve the current situation or a need for employee communication about leadership. Whatever the focus of the team, they'll need to determine the areas they should begin working on immediately, and how best to introduce them to the organization. The second step is to review how well the organization has done in the past, and to determine what has worked well. This will help the team to avoid re-introducing
