More particularly, the present invention relates to a vehicle occupant sensor system which can be easily installed in a vehicle to passively monitor the occupancy of an automotive passenger seat to detect when an occupant has fallen asleep in the vehicle, that is, the occupant's head has moved forward from a normal, upright position. The sensor system prevents the vehicle from operating if the seat is occupied, that is, if the head has moved forward, causing the head to occlude the visibility of the vehicle operator or another vehicle operator. The art has previously proposed a variety of sensor systems to passively monitor the occupancy of a vehicle seat for the purpose of preventing the vehicle from operating when the seat is occupied. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,934,868 issued Jun. 19, 1990, U.S. Pat. No. 5,357,481 issued Oct. 25, 1994, U.S. Pat. No. 5,909,464 issued Jun. 1, 1999, U.S. Pat. No. 6,144,645 issued Nov. 7, 2000, U.S. Pat. No. 6,137,329 issued Oct. 24, 2000, and U.S. Pat. No. 6,148,150 issued Nov. 14, 2000, disclose and claim vehicle occupant sensor systems which include a sensor having a first contact, a second contact, and an electrical conducting member which electrically connects the first and second contacts so that the system is actuated when the sensor is moved away from a position in which the electrical conducting member contacts a vehicle body or seat frame portion on which the sensor is mounted.
