In the next few weeks, when you will be in the act of pulling or unpacking your tax return filing, you will likely find it fun to look at the previous years tax statements. In most cases, you may observe a decrease in the amount of money you claimed as a tax deduction. This is because the amount of money you claim as a tax deduction is based on the interest that you earn on IRA assets (Individual Retirement Accounts and Other Retirement Accounts). So, what happens when the interest earned on those assets decreases? This means that the tax deduction that you claim may change. In order to get a clear picture of how changes in interest rates affect your tax deductions, you can look at the IRS publication "Income Tax Guide for Individuals" for an introduction to interest rates and how they affect taxes. There are two types of IRA accounts (Traditional IRA and Roth IRA) and an IRA made up of money from your payroll accounts with pre-tax money that has already been taxed. If you are in the process of filing your tax return, you may opt to get a free IRA tax consultation and get advice on what your true tax liability for the upcoming filing would be. You can find the link to the IRS website, www.irs.gov, on the eIRAParameterCalculator section on the right side of your web page. You can use this IRS Publication if you are in the process of calculating your tax deduction. The first step would be to calculate the balance of your Traditional or Roth IRA. The interest that you earn on your IRA balance is used as a tax deduction. If the balance of your account is small, the interest earned on it may be below the minimum that is tax deductible. If your balance is greater than $100,000, the tax deductibility starts with the interest that you earn on your account. As of January 1, 2016, the interest earned on your Traditional IRA is now equal to the maximum that can be deducted from your federal income taxes. For 2016, this is $4,000. The interest that you earn on your Roth IRA is deductible. For 2016, the interest is $4,000. The minimum that is eligible for tax deduction in 2016 is $2,000. If you have a qualified 401K from your employer, the interest that you earn on
