Born-Oppenheimer approximation: a route to high accuracy in the description of polyatomic systems. In the Born-Oppenheimer approximation, vibrational motion is assumed to be static or insignificant with respect to electronic and nuclear motion. Under this assumption the electronic energy is expressed as a function of the positions of nuclei, which leads to a generalization of the harmonic oscillator potential for describing the potential surface. The generalization of the harmonic oscillator potential may also represent a route to high accuracy in the description of polyatomic systems. We illustrate this assertion by comparing the results of calculations with the harmonic oscillator model and a generalization of the model, using the multireference configuration interaction method.
