These data demonstrate the requirement of CD45 as a signal transducer of CII in the pathogenesis of CIA. CII-specific T-cell lines derived from arthritic CIA-mice, showed increased proliferative capacity and cytokine production when re-stimulated in vitro with CII in the presence of anti-CD45 mAb. Furthermore, reconstitution of T-cell deficient mice with a CD45-negative clone from arthritic mice induced arthritis when transferred intravenously into these recipients. Thus, the function of CD45 is essential for the development of CIA. It is important to point out that the CD45 gene deficient T-cell lines used in our study are derived from lymph node cells of arthritic mice that contain T-cells specific for CII, which are activated in the context of a complex in vivo microenvironment.
