What is the device's AT&T compatibility? AT&T is a wireless phone network in the United States, operated by Verizon Wireless. The network's area of service covers the states of New York and Wisconsin, as well as parts of Massachusetts and South Carolina. Most of the AT&T network overlaps the Verizon Wireless network, however unlike Verizon, AT&T generally does not offer service in rural areas. Most devices will also work on both networks at the same time, enabling you to switch from AT&T to Verizon as your location requires. The AT&T compatibility of a phone does not indicate the service or coverage that the phone provides. Customers can use the “Find My Phone” feature on the AT&T website to track a device on AT&T’s network if the customer loses their device, but this is much more complicated than the manufacturer’s website which usually only lists compatible phones. The most common wireless phone network for each device is listed below. In some cases, the manufacturer will list alternate carriers under compatibility, in these cases the alternate carriers are a good way to ensure the device will work on an AT&T network if the listed network is not available. Please note that this compatibility list is not all inclusive, new devices may be added without notice, and devices that may be listed as working on another network will not work on that network. This is not intended to be a definitive guide to compatibility, as there are many factors to consider when using a wireless device such as frequency, signal strength, available networks and overall coverage.

Q: how to set the size of a split textview in android? I am using a custom adapter to render some list. In this list, there are some images and I need to display the images in a bigger size, i.e., I should be able to enlarge the size of the image. I want to fill the space between the image and the textview with a gray color. So I did the following: 1.I set the weight of the layout. 2.In the image view, I set the scaleType to fitCenter 3. In the textview, I set the textSize 4. Finally, I add the android:background="#f0f0f0" in the textview My problem is I cannot set the size of the image, since the image is not displayed in the place of
