The present invention relates to a web feeding apparatus and an image recording apparatus and, more particularly, to a web feeding apparatus and an image recording apparatus which enable the most appropriate web feeding from among a plurality of webs to be selected, and record images in accordance with the selected web. Two-sided printing in which image information is printed on two sides of a paper web has gained wide acceptance as printers for computers have become more popular and inexpensive. This type of printers are being widely used as two-sided recording apparatuses, facsimile machines, and the like. Among other paper webs, large paper webs of 20, 30, or more sheets per side are most often used. These paper webs are supplied in the form of rolls, and are cut on a supply side according to the amount of recording. In recent years, in the recording apparatuses for computers or facsimile machines, the most appropriate web to be supplied to a recording head is not necessarily picked up from a plurality of rolls, but paper sheets that have been mounted on a single roll are continuously used. FIG. 7 shows an example of two rolls mounted on a single roll, and each of the rolls has paper sheets mounted thereon in a predetermined sheet amount. The size of each of the rolls is such that the number of sheet amounts of respective kinds of papers may be added up to a single roll. The roll may be
