

Reginout system utilities work with the following parts of Windows operating systems: System data (temporal files, Windows, .Bat, .Exe, .dll registry, Windows object files, device driver files etc.), system functions and files.Bat (Red Hat Enterprise Linux). Reginin may include batch agents, utilities for working with temporary files and objects (including file). Thus, RegInPro provides specialized tools for working with the following types of files: Created files can be standard (for example, under the name login.log) or user (for example: logintest.dll or loginTestDLL). By default, the login test.dt file is created for the Login_Test.exe program. Loading software from file is performed in 2 stages: Batch agents can, both create and edit the system file.In the first case, the running agent, using the mechanism built into it, changes the contents of the computer's file system (in particular, the files of RAM and Windows partitions). In the second, he creates (or edits) the system file and loads the compiled program code into it. In this case, the launch can be done either through the regedit.ex program, or directly with the cmd command. Usually such actions are performed in combination with a command. Also, by default, booting eventually creates a system file called loginreg.bin, which can later be used to load system libraries and other Windows components (in some releases of Windows

7, booting in advanced mode is possible). The System Root components that RegInRoot works with include: In the absence of the required launch library, RegIn can cause it to be automatically created. In some versions of Windows, the program umount.ex (Extended Root) can be used for this purpose.
