Interceptor Hints and Guards

The Interceptor Patterns

The Interceptor Hints and Guards pattern

An Interceptor can act on anything that comes into contact with a Stream. Imagine the following scenario: Now, we have some GUI classes, let's say a JTextField and a JButton. When the user enters text in the JTextField, we need to pass it to the Logger class to be logged to the console. A JButton should be pressed for the event to be sent to the Server. If you were using the Stream pattern, you would have to write a complete event handler, but we can simplify the implementation. Instead of writing a whole event handler for the JButton, we can register an Interceptor to intercept the event flow. In this case, we are registering a ButtonInterceptor for the JButton to receive the event and we are forwarding it to the Server class that handles the event. The Interceptor would look something like this:

package com.kongregate.interceptors; import org.apache.log4j.Logger; import com.kongregate.data.Api; import com.kongregate.data.Spinner; import com.kongregate.data.User; import java.awt.event.MouseEvent; import java.awt.event.MouseListener; import java.util.logging.Level; import java.util.logging.Logger; import javax.swing.AbstractButton; import javax.swing.ButtonModel; import javax.swing.JButton; import javax.swing.JFrame; / * */public class ButtonInterceptor {private

---

final Logger log = Logger.getLogger(ButtonInterceptor.class); private static final int MAIN_FRAME_HEIGHT = 300; private static final int MAIN
