Angiographic features of the internal carotid artery after bypass surgery. To retrospectively assess the results of carotid endarterectomy in patients with angiographic evidence of internal carotid artery occlusion and to determine whether such angiographic data predict the operative and postoperative outcome. One hundred fifty-one patients underwent carotid endarterectomy between September 1992 and March 2000. The results of 28 patients with preoperative imaging that showed occlusion of the internal carotid artery and patch angioplasty were reviewed. Angiographic examinations of the internal carotid artery performed before the procedure showed that the patients had occlusion of the internal carotid artery but patent distal branches. After carotid endarterectomy, there were 5 minor (all asymptomatic) strokes (21%), 4 myocardial infarctions (14%), 5 endarterectomies without carotid stenosis (18%) and 4 endarterectomies with stenosis (14%) after a mean follow-up of 20 months (range, 4 to 62 months). Angiography of the internal carotid artery after carotid endarterectomy in 14 patients without stenosis demonstrated a persistent occlusion (25%). The results of this study suggest that patients with angiographic evidence of internal carotid artery occlusion can be safely operated on without prophylactic use of a shunt and with excellent results. I believe in making the most of things, even if I am not 'wasting' anything. So, I am not going to just fold my card, put it away, and say that it's done. No. I am not that defeatist. At least I am not sure I am. The same goes for my clothes. There is so much I would like to do, but I am just too lazy to do. I have a few (actually, just one) that I have not worn once. Or folded once. Or worn out of the plastic bag. It's ridiculous. So, I will not fold my clothes, and I will not fold my cards. I will keep
