Intensity-modulated radiotherapy using the Edge system: planning and implementation. The purpose of this work was to develop a method to perform an intensity-modulated radiotherapy treatment planning for patients using a volumetric arc-scanning linear accelerator (Edge system). This method allows for the radiation field to be created by the multiple control of each collimator by the scanning sequence of a multi-leaf collimator. The planar dose distributions in the planes parallel to the couch were measured using a diode array and a computed tomography phantom. The isodose lines were calculated in the same plane using the measured dose distributions and were compared to the theoretical lines calculated using
