Understanding the differences between the various Adobe products When you edit photos, you're primarily thinking about three areas of the image: *

- * The image, which contains the subject matter.
- * The areas that need to change or remove, also known as the `_mask_` (see the next section).
- * The areas you want to remain in the image, also known as the `_adjustment layer_` (see the next section).

In Photoshop, you have all three sections available: The image, the mask, and the adjustment layer. In Photoshop Elements, you have the image, the adjustment layer, and the selection tool. (All three have the same purpose.) So when you edit a photo and are presented with options to work in one of these areas, you may as well use all three. The most common uses for working in these three areas are as follows: * Images: You can crop or create items in any of the three areas. * Masks: You can alter areas of an image by making a selection around an area you want to edit, add a new layer, and then erase the areas you don't want. * Adjustments: You can make adjustments to the image, such as changing the brightness or color. * Selections: You can make a selection around objects or another image.

Step 1: Select an image You can load an image by clicking File > Open > File. Browse and select the image you wish to edit or create. Step 2: Open the image Now you can adjust the levels by clicking the Layers button. Open the image and press Alt+Enter (Windows) or Apple + Enter (Mac) to open the Layers panel. A white bar will show at the top of the image window indicating the background of the image. Step 3: Adjust the brightness, contrast, and color Right-click on the white bar at the top of the image and select Adjust Brightness/Contrast. You can see the result in the preview. You can also add Curves to adjust the brightness and contrast independently in the Curves panel (the C key will open the Curves panel). In the Colors panel, you can adjust color to complement or complement the photo. You can also use the Hue/Saturation tool to adjust the color of the photo. This tool can make any part of the photo appear more saturated. There are also two other tools that control the overall color of the photo. Step 4: Select the necessary adjustments. The below images show the Layers, Brightness, Contrast and Hue/Saturation panels. The Layers panel is to the left of the image window. A typical photo in Photoshop Elements will usually require adjusting the brightness, contrast and color. If you want to remove a background (the red brick background in the image below), you will first have to use the Eraser tool to erase the brick. Then you can use the Quick Selection tool to select the brick and press Delete to remove the brick from the photo. To remove a background, it is generally best to use a plain, solid-colored or a light-colored background (like the pillow) rather than using a brick. After you have removed the background, you can remove any unwanted objects by using the Quick Selection tool.

Step 5: Using filters, objects and adding effects Click the Filter icon in the menu bar and select the apply filter in the menu. Filters can be used to change the appearance of the photo. You can resize an object by simply clicking and dragging it in the image window. You can also use the Free Transform tool (T) to resize the object. The Free Transform tool (T) can

The Pentagon said Tuesday that the United States has made a strategic decision to withdraw its remaining troops from Iraq, even as President Obama tried to tamp down the urge to withdraw the remaining 90,000 troops in the country. In an interview with NBC's "Today" show, Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said the U.S. hasn't finished combat operations in Iraq, but is "beginning to complete" them. "We have not made a decision about the future of our forces in Iraq," he said. Obama also said Tuesday that the U.S. presence in Iraq will not be pulled out immediately. "It is always desirable to get out of a war quicker than the enemy," Obama said during an interview with NBC. "It is my judgment, and I think the president agrees with me, that our forces are doing what they need to do." The decision on the troops will probably come Wednesday, though, as the Pentagon will no longer release troop counts each day. In a press conference after his meeting with U.N. envoy, Stephen Mull, Obama said he was interested in developing a long-term security arrangement between U.S. troops and Iraqi forces. He also said he has been in "intensive conversations" with Republican and Democratic leaders about a compromise that would deal with the current budget impasse between the Senate and House of Representatives, but that
