Placental clearance and protein-synthesis of 14C-labelled amino acids in cattle. Carboplatin-14C was administered as a single intravenous injection of 20 mg/kg body weight to six pregnant cattle at 130 days of gestation. Tissue uptake of 14C-labelled carboplatin and the effect of carboplatin on the uptake of various amino acids in the pregnant cow were determined. Carboplatin-14C in blood, plasma and bile was bound to albumin and to "metallothionein". Tissue concentrations of 14C-carboplatin were highest in maternal blood, placenta and fetal membranes. The highest levels of 14C-carboplatin were found in the liver and kidney at 24 hr and 9 days after injection, respectively. 14C-carboplatin-metabolites were higher in bile than in plasma. The highest rate of excretion of 14C in bile occurred at 9 days after injection, while it took longer to reach maximum concentrations in plasma. Distribution of the 14C-labelled amino acids cystine, cysteine, glutamate, glutamine, glycine, histidine and methionine was not affected by carboplatin. Accumulation of 14C-labelled glycine was highest in the liver, kidney, spleen, heart and lung of treated cows. In the liver, carboplatin decreased the accumulation of 14C-labelled amino acids, especially glycine and cysteine. This was also true for the liver of calves which were exposed to higher concentrations of carboplatin during foetal development.In 2012, media reports identified Russian hackers as having infiltrated the site of the Democratic National Committee and leaked emails that appeared to show a concerted effort by the party to undermine Vermont Sen.
