Ask HN: How much do you pay for your SaaS providers? - grln I've been asked to do a survey about how much we pay for our SaaS providers. I didn't want to answer it, but I'm curious to know what the average is, and since I was told we're not the average, I have to know in what way we deviate. ===== pbreit How about free? ---- grln We do, but our business plan is more comparable to the enterprise-based model. ---- pbreit If you're building a business, you should pay for it. ---- grln We didn't pay for the business plan. We paid for a couple of years of the product free. ---- pbreit I haven't checked, but I suspect the business plan is also free. The use of conservation electrophoresis with charged, starch-based additives to reduce the electrical conductivity and increase the mobility of non-S-DA-substituted phospholipids. An electrophoretic method has been developed to resolve non-S-DA-substituted phospholipids by using charged, starch-based additives in conjunction with field-amplified sample stacking (FASS) (Dong et al., Anal. Chem. 78, 6387-6392, 2006) to effect reversible changes in the electrical conductivity of the background electrolyte and the viscosity of the polymer gel. In contrast to the conventional free sulfate anion-based buffer system, the current approach is to utilize a buffer system with charged, carbohydrate additives and has shown to be able to resolve the phospholipids without requiring a conductivity detector
