Customers who are looking to build up a big library of content for their users may be interested to know about a new tool from Dropbox that automatically creates a user-friendly podcast directory for every user profile. The new directory—called the Podcasts directory—is available in the Dropbox iOS app and it might be the best directory-building solution out there on the App Store, hands down. Users of Apple's podcasting service, Apple Podcasts, will be familiar with the directory when creating a podcast or navigating through the podcast collection. Creating a user's podcast directory is a simple and straightforward process: create the playlist, tap the star icon and wait for the directory to pop up. It's extremely easy to add new podcasts to the directory and even easier to add new files to your existing podcast directory. The download size is light, but the podcast directory does not add any new content to the user's Dropbox account. The directory itself is not exactly clear in the Dropbox app as it is very dark and the file system view of the directory, when pinned to the top row of the folder, does not show podcast files. It would be good for the app to have a little bit more information on the podcast files available in the directory. Apart from creating a user's podcast directory
