References: JS Alert box - Don't display alert if function is undefined I am trying to create a JS script that sends a mail upon clicking on a button. If I get the script working without an alert box, I will add it to an external JS file that will be loaded after the initial page load. However, I don't want the user to be prompted with an alert box for the error handler. How do I do this? Below is the source for the button: Send Here is the email code: function mail() { var error = false; var form = document.forms
