In this article, I explore the making of an image of a woman on her deathbed, a very concrete image. I address issues of agency and responsibility and, more broadly, the care of the sick body. I attempt to reconcile the recent calls to personalise medicine and the enduring medical paternalism that I have described in previous work. I engage with a range of theorists: Michel Foucault, Jacques Derrida and Michel Serres. I argue that the now well-known image is a type of 'biomedical self': a projected, bodily image of the self with which we attempt to make sense of our situation and act upon it.Long-term visual outcome following successful rhegmatogenous retinal detachment repair. To report the long-term visual and anatomic outcomes following successful repair of rhegmatogenous retinal detachment (RRD). A retrospective chart review of 42 eyes in 40 patients with complete RRD repair was performed. Preoperative and postoperative data were collected for visual acuity, intraocular pressure (IOP), and frequency of an IOP rise >10 mmHg during follow-up. Anatomic outcome was defined as reattachment without scleral buckling or laser scleroplasty. Patients were
