Find out what's new on OfficialWindowsMagazine.com directly from the sidebar!The present invention relates generally to a method and system for controlling a plant that is driven by a pump through a valve, and more particularly, to a method and system for controlling the pump when the plant is driven at a pump flow rate that is less than a pump flow rate required to keep the valve open. In many systems, a pump is used to drive a valve or a plant that has a pump flow rate greater than a pump flow rate required to keep the valve open. The flow rate required to keep the valve open is commonly referred to as the pressure set-point. In many situations, the plant is subject to a shock load, such as a plant that is running at a high load, or a plant that has a surge, that forces the plant to close or open the valve. When the plant closes or opens, the pump flow rate drops, and the flow rate through the valve becomes less than the pressure set-point. When this occurs, the pump starts running again, and the pump flow rate increases until the flow rate through the valve becomes equal to the pressure set-point. In other situations, the plant is running at a lower load, or is not subject to a surge, so the flow rate through the valve is kept equal to the pressure set-point. This may be done for several reasons, such as, to keep the valve from sticking closed, to prevent cavitation in the pump, or to keep a constant flow rate through the valve. When the plant is running at a lower load or is not subject to a surge, the pump flow rate is usually equal to the pressure set-point, so the pump flow rate will usually be increased to equal the pressure set-point when the flow rate through the valve drops below the pressure set-point. In many applications, it is desirable to pump the fluid at a rate less than the pressure set-point, so that the pump does not have to work as hard and the pump life can be extended. The flow rate through the valve varies with the pump flow rate, and it is often difficult to predict the flow rate through the valve. The flow rate is a function of many factors, including, but not limited to, the pressure of the fluid, the viscosity

This is because, in our opinion, it is the most important Windows release ever. Although we like many of the design decisions made by Microsoft for Windows 8, we feel that some of the core functions of the operating system have not been fully exploited. We share the opinion that Windows 8 is a successor to Windows Vista. We are convinced that Windows 8 will be a big success for Microsoft, and that it is better to design an excellent operating system than a good one. Microsoft have been caught in a double trouble over their statement about Windows 8 not being the successor of Vista, now the statement has been corrected in their FAQ Page! Also, new info is emerging about their plan for Windows 8 for the next 5 years. Microsoft is planning to offer new security updates for Windows 7, instead of installing Windows 8 with the security updates. They also plan to offer future Windows OS as upgrade from Windows 8. Microsoft's upcoming plans for Windows 8, stated at BUILD. Searching for Windows 8 Education Edition? 3 March 2014 Microsoft has released Windows 8 Education Edition that is a lighter version of Windows 8 with enhanced features designed to support education and training requirements. Windows 8 Education Edition gives schools and training institutions the flexibility and choice to adapt existing Windows 7 and Windows Server 2008 environments to their needs, whilst still delivering proven reliability and scalability. What should we know about Windows 8 and Windows Server 2012? 3 March 2014 Microsoft has just announced a new version of Windows Server 2012, named Windows Server 2012 R2. Windows Server 2012 R2 is built upon a new version of Windows Server core, codenamed Long Term Servicing 1d6a3396d6
