A vs. Photoshop CS5 The name and design change for the latest version of Photoshop happens to coincide with the release of a cheaper upgrade to Photoshop CS5, the first version of the program that offers a more affordable price of $119 (rather than $299 for Photoshop CS6). Adobe describes the Photoshop CS5: "The new name reflects the fact that Photoshop CS5 offers all of the capabilities of CS6, plus more. "The design is more modern, with a comprehensive new user interface that makes it easier than ever to navigate. New interface elements include the new Replace option for the Quick Selection tool and new features to make it easier to track changes and share your work with others. "A new 3D workspace has been added, allowing you to create and manipulate models and render views right in the Photoshop workspace." This article focuses mainly on the features of Photoshop CS6. There are also five new effect sets: Pop Art, Pop Art Vintage, Simple Art, After Effects and Frames. As you can see from the screen shots below, the images now have rounded corners. Recovery of the facial nerve after endoscopic decompression and myofascial flap transfer in a patient with AICA loop. The literature on the use of decompressive surgery in the management of CPA-LMM is controversial, but this particular patient was safely managed by a combined endoscopic technique and myofascial flap transfer.

Q: How to write a javascript function to access a variable that is scoped to the window object in a button inside an iframe? I am using IFRAME SRC= method to embed another page within my page. I am trying to add a button on my page which on clicking will write the contents of the "IFrame" into a HTML file. The issue is that the code is not able to access the contents of the variable created using the "this" keyword. I tried accessing the variable like window.content but it gave an error saying that content is undefined. Can someone please help me with a solution. Below is the code that I tried.

```
var content = window.content; var filename = "/Content"; if (content) { var obj = document.createElement("IFRAME"); document.body.appendChild(obj); obj.src = filename; }
```

A: As the original answer says, you can not just make a reference to the global object, and write code that relies on it directly without first doing a global.someName = "something" to set the value. If it's a single variable, you can simple set it to the global object. This is called a "hack".

```
var content = window;
```

You may also access a variable with the window object by using a name that is defined in the global object. This is generally considered bad practice.

```
window.someVar = "some value";

If you are using a framework like Backbone, where you have a collection of models, and each model has a "content" property that you want to be part of the global object, then you need to set it to the global object instead. Example:

The British government is in early talks with the American administration to carry out airstrikes in Syria following the recent chemical weapons attack. The US will be ready to provide air support to NATO-member Britain in any intervention, President Donald Trump's national security adviser John Bolton told The Telegraph. "We are early in these discussions to see what's most effective," Bolton said. "If there's an appropriate plan for that to be effective, then we'll consider it. "We are prepared to provide any form of assistance that the British would ask for." He said that the one condition in any assistance would be an assurance that it would not be used to "prop up" the embattled Syrian regime of President Bashar Assad. Earlier, senior White House officials told Reuters news agency that the UK has requested military support for a planned air strike on Syria. Bolton said the US and UK will share intelligence and coordinate how they plan to strike Syria. Read more He said that Britain is planning to proceed independently of the UN-mandated program to remove chemical weapons. Bolton said the UK is expected to use US military planes for the air strikes. "It would be US air power that will be brought in to strike a place where the Syrians have these chemical weapons, and then we will conduct these operations with British and possibly other armed forces on the ground," Bolton said. "We've already made it clear to the Russians that we're doing this, that we're not going to do this in conjunction with the Syrians," he added. The White House has not asked the UN Security Council to authorize military force, a senior administration official told Reuters. Earlier, Trump said that the US might launch a military attack on Syria if the use of chemical weapons continues. He added that he would prefer to work with Russia than "do business" with the Assad regime. "President Assad choked out the lives of helpless men, women, and children. It was a slow and brutal death for so many people, even beautiful babies were cruelly murdered in this very barbaric attack. If Russia and the United States are unable to work together to resolve peacefully a problem, each side should pay a stiff price." Trump, who has called Assad a "murderous dictator" during his campaign to become president,
