A course in which students are presented with an unfiltered, unbiased view of the language. For example, one could say that there is a lot of difference between the way that a native and a nonnative uses the Finnish language, much like how there is a difference between the way that a native and nonnative uses the language English, but this is just a generalization, and people could potentially take things in a different direction. An in-depth exploration of a language, its history, its evolution, and its modern and past influences. Examination of linguistic features in light of past development of the language. For example, English speakers tend to hear the difference between a cat and a catfish more clearly than the same difference in Spanish; it is much easier for English speakers to tell the difference between the English word cat and the Spanish word gato.
