It is a games involving either the drawing of numbers or the selection of winning numbers from a pool of numbers. The pool of numbers is generated by an automated computer system, and are read by 'lucky' fans and players, who then make their selections. The numbers are made available for purchase online, as instant tickets. The United Kingdom has eight main lotteries, each offering different prizes (most of which are funded by the government), and over 16 million people regularly play the games. By contrast, The United States has no national lottery games, but since 1991, winners of each state lottery game are able to travel to the state lottery headquarters to collect their winnings. It was originally created to allow each winner from each state to keep their winnings in their state of residence, but due to legislative action, it is now funded by the federal
