

The experiment is repeated for different values $\hat{a} \in \mathbb{R}$ of P while maintaining $P + Q$ equal to 10000 Ohm. (Remember, $\hat{I}_1$ was originally defined as the angle of deflection of the mirror. $\hat{I}_1$ is the angle between P and Q , measured in the direction the mirror is moving. Because P and Q change slowly, the change in $P+Q$ in the two-mirror experiment can be taken into account by changing P as described above. Because the change in $P+Q$ in the two-mirror experiment can be taken into account, and because $Q=\text{const}$, the change in Q in the single-mirror experiment can be taken into account by changing Q . To understand how such a simple transformation can be done, imagine that Q is some function of P .
