Let me look at the project in detail. I will provide my valuable services for you as soon as possible.Q: Whats the best way to tell if firefox uses the new html5 postmessage? I want to know if I need to do something special in my code to properly handle html5 postmessage. Currently I've got code that works in IE8 and above, FF 3.x, and also in Chrome. If I'm creating the message, I append the data to the postMessage message body and concatenate it onto the beginning. If I'm receiving the message, I concatenate it to the end. I'm well aware that since the spec doesn't guarantee message order, browsers can do whatever they want. Also, it may be the case that the client does not support postmessage, and that the message gets sent as if it was a form request. So what's the best way to tell if the browser does actually support postMessage? In IE8 and above, FF, and Chrome there is no issue sending the message over and over, but I don't know if there's going to be any issues with multiple, independent
