What's New In?

To no one's surprise, Bruce Jenner made a video explaining to the world why he is abandoning the "he" part of his herstory. "This is me becoming a woman," said Jenner in what was announced as the first video he's ever shot for National Geographic. "I'm very happy to have this opportunity to show myself." In the first preview of the short clip, the 65-year-old star posted a picture of him in a blonde wig on Saturday. "Two years ago, I told the world that I was gender fluid. That was my lowest moment of my life," Jenner said. "Today, I am happy to say that I am living as a woman. Now I am Diane. I'll continue to take hormones and eventually, surgery." "Don't take my pronouns. They don't matter. I have always been a she, a woman and a survivor. What matters is the things inside of us. I'm a woman, a woman of color, a survivor and a target of hatred." Although the rest of the clip is still top secret, it'll include Jenner's first interview as a woman. "I'm different. Why can't I be seen as different?" he asked. "I want you to focus on the message, not me. If I'm different, can we focus on the message I'm bringing to the world? And what I'm going to do from now on in my life and in my community." While many fans were thrilled to see the "Kardashian" star move beyond the famous family and come out as transgender, fans and pundits alike were quick to question how the scandalous change would translate on the world stage. "Not the gender reveal at least, wish I could have been a fly on the wall," joked Twitter. The video comes as two of Jenner's sisters, Kim Kardashian West and Kourtney Kardashian, are showing solidarity with the dad of three. "The fact that this is happening right now as we all watch will make it that much more exciting," Kim recently told E! News. "This is so much bigger than all of us. I'm so proud that Bruce is finally feeling himself, and I'm really looking forward to where his journey goes from here."Q: function(XMLHttpRequest) { I have a function function validateEmail() { if (document
