It's an everyday slog, but if you want to get ahead in your career you need to get out there. The best way to do that? Be social. Social media is everywhere — and inescapable. We're always scrolling through our Instagram feeds, Twitter and Facebook. So how can you get people to notice you while you're still at your internship? The answer is, you need to be more social. Here are five tips for being more social in your internship: Set yourself apart When you first start working, you will inevitably feel like an odd ball in the office. But you can take some steps to set yourself apart from the norm. Make an effort to talk to the people around you in the office. It's important to put yourself out there and get to know people in the workplace. If you're shy, it may not be the best time to start, but it's a good opportunity to practice social skills. If you're an introvert, you may feel like everyone around you is boisterous and outgoing. You may not know what to say or do to be more social. That's OK. There are plenty of ways to do that. You could join a team that you're a part of. Or, you could get involved in the activities you're already involved in. With social media you have a wealth of opportunities to be more social. You could set up a Twitter account for your work, make a Facebook fan page and post pictures of your work on Instagram. You could also participate in events that your team hosts and promote your products. Even if you aren't a social person, you can still be social. Talk to your colleagues about the things you're interested in. If you're constantly talking to yourself, speak up and ask for advice. You may be surprised how much you can learn and what people want to share with you. Make time to get out of your zone One of the biggest reasons people don't connect with people outside of their team is because they're only hanging around during work hours. You want to get out of your
