the strange friendship of Gilbert and Luigi Entertainment comes in many forms. Being weird about it is one of them. My friend, Gilberto comes to me with a wonderful new film (a musical movie or not, I don't know). He's a Spanish marketing expert who loves doing odd promotions for the world's biggest brands. If you are a wannabe critic, he's what you might call the "anti-Cineuropa" for his extremely researched and tailored approach to marketing. I've watched a handful of his films and very often he's in charge of creating videos where a very famous Italian celeb (like Arianna Huffington or Roberto Cavalli) promotes the best selling chick lit in the United States. He told me about this new creative work he's being paid to do. He is directing an Italian cartoon made by Super7. "It's very funny and it's made by two brothers. One is French, the other one is Italian. They had a fantastic idea and since they are both very special people, they decided to merge the two cultures. They've created a real tribute to the friendship between the famous French Bulldog, Gibert and the Italian Cat, Luigi. The most famous animal friendship in history! "People all over the world love this story and we will launch it in France with Gibert and Luigi playing themselves in a French animated musical. They're the stars of the show." That sounds like a great project for two fans of the genre. Do they play themselves? What roles do they play? Do they sing? What happens next? Who's the target audience for this? "Each of them has played a very important role. Luigi was the silent lover of Gibert, in case you couldn't tell. Gibert is the strong and strong-headed friend of Luigi, who has convinced his beloved to fly with him. He has a smaller character than Gibert but his story is a lot funnier." Are there others playing characters? Have there been any voices? Is there a narrator? What age ranges are the films aimed at? Is it connected to any of your other projects? "Yes, it's a Japanese animated musical. The two superfamous friends of Gibert and Luigi are

Health-related quality of life in patients with high or low levels of community violence in the United States: results from the 2009 National Health Interview Survey. Community violence has been associated with an increased risk of health-related quality of life (HRQoL) problems. The objective of this study was to analyze the association between levels of community violence and HRQoL among the adult population in the United States. The 2009 National Health Interview Survey (NHIS) data were analyzed for 25,594 adults. Adjusted differences in HRQoL domains and overall poor HRQoL were analyzed for adults exposed to different levels of community violence: respondents who experienced one or more types of violence, including life-threatening violence, severe physical violence, rape, and sexual assault; those who were exposed to more than one type of violence; and those who were not exposed to any violence. The overall prevalence of being exposed to at least one type of violence was 11.8%. Although prevalence of exposure to violence was highest among those in same-sex couples, it was highest among women. Women, Blacks, and those with higher levels of education had the highest prevalence of exposure to any violence. Health-related problems and life-threatening violence each had a greater odds of being exposed to violence than rape, sexual assault, or physical violence. Being exposed to violence was associated with an increased risk of fair/poor health status and increased odds of experiencing pain and mental distress. Life-threatening violence was associated with the greatest increase in poor mental health. The same associations also were seen in those exposed to more than one type of violence. People who are exposed to community violence experience worse HRQoL. [Gardnerella vaginalis is a probable opportunistic pathogen in women with Crohn disease]. To evaluate the frequency of Gardnerella vaginalis in women with Crohn disease and their sexual partners. The same germ was isolated from the vaginal environment in 15% of 62 sex partners of the patients and in 63% of 70 women with Crohn disease. An epidemiological connection of these two groups could be excluded. The number of Gardnerella isolates was 36 and 64 from sex partners and cases, respectively. When comparing the association of Crohn disease with BV and G. vaginalis infection, no correlation could be found. From the results of this study G. vaginalis is not an exclusive, but a possible opportunistic pathogen in Crohn disease. Q: CSS Error in the Microsoft Edge Browser
