Q: Do I have to wait for all images on the page to load before setting styles with jQuery? I'm creating a web page that has lots of images and I'm using this javascript code to apply a background color to the page: `$(function() { $(".overlay").addClass("red"); });` The problem is, this code works well when the page loads but if any image (that isn't already loaded) is triggered to load, then the background color doesn't change. Do I have to wait for ALL the images to load before applying the code or is there a way to apply the code even if some images haven't finished loading? Thank you!

A: When doing any javascript manipulation on the page, the entire page has to load to the point where you are doing that manipulation. In addition to the images, you will also have any other external javascript code you want to load. If you're loading those images over AJAX, you'll want to load the next set of images once the first set finishes loading. So you want to wait until ALL the external code has loaded as well as all the images, then do your manipulation. With that you'll be fine.

Q: MySQL: SELECT column based on another column value I have a MySQL table with 2 columns: user_id and connection_id. I want to get the name of the connection that the user is connected with (if he has multiple connections, i.e. he is logged in 2 different places). I have tried this but it doesn't seem to work (it returns 0 even though i have several entries) `SELECT connection_id, connection_name FROM`
