How does a Yii application test integration work? Let's say I wrote the following UnitTests for an UserController: class UserControllerTest extends ControllerTestCase { protected function setUp() { parent::setUp(); $this->log = new TestLog; $this->controller = new UserController; } public function testTest() { $this->controller->index(); $this->assertEquals('test', $this->controller->display()); } } I'd expect this to fail when run, because it accesses $_GET['id'] directly. However, it passes. And when I run the application in debug mode and step through to the index() method, it will just pass as well. The user isn't logged in when testing. How does Yii handle this? Does it store the logged in user in a global/namespace? Is the $_GET['id'] from the UnitTest's assertion not sent to the view to be processed? A: The answer is in the manual: Test cases that access the logged in user (getUser()) should also include that they use the default "admin" user account. This will force the user to log in on the test server. Once logged in, all the request parameters are set, meaning the user will see the request "change", not just the one [for the test case]. So all you need to do is set $user = Yii::app()->getUser() before doing the test. The relationship between intestinal parasites and mental retardation in children.
