Or how about remembering to have the kettle boiling for your partner every day, but having to leave the house to do it? (Image: James Dyson) These are the challenges faced by a new generation of British homeowners, who are forced to stay within the four walls of their new home while their flat or box gets so much more, says TV presenter James Dyson. In his latest series of 'Every Space Matters', the inventor launches his latest product, the Umbrella Magnifier, which is specifically designed to help those with vision problems. And it's believed that the adorable little cup and saucer holder will help to alleviate the problems associated with having a box into which everything has to be neatly stacked, and it will do so by helping those who struggle with packing and unpacking their flat. The device can be purchased from Dyson's website for £40 and is on sale for £50 from next week. (Image: James Dyson) Those who have struggled to keep their tea cups and mugs to hand may find the ingenious high-tech solution helpful. Dyson's growing concern about the lack of space in the average home was expressed in the early days when he was regularly reminded how much more there is to do in the house, and the unnecessary cups, plates, socks and shoes cluttering up cupboards, which makes things ever more difficult to find. The inventor of the Dyson vacuum cleaner, who has been adding more into each of his creations over the years, knows the daily problems associated with what he calls a "typical British flat" and says many people, including his wife, are constantly worrying about where to put their stuff. He said: "My wife usually has to leave the house with the kettle running and the baby in the pushchair for a cup of tea 570a42141b
