1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device having a silicon layer having a non-monocrystalline structure formed on a single crystal silicon substrate and more particularly to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device having a silicon layer having a non-monocrystalline structure formed on a single crystal silicon substrate by means of the atmospheric pressure CVD method. 2. Description of the Prior Art A laser crystallization method has been proposed as a method of forming a thin silicon layer on a substrate of silicon material such as single crystal silicon substrate by means of the atmospheric pressure CVD method. In order to form a silicon layer on a substrate of the laser crystallization method, it is necessary to form a crystalline silicon layer on the substrate and to anneal the silicon layer at a temperature near the crystallizing temperature of silicon (about 1400.degree. C.) in the atmosphere to crystallize the silicon layer. Silicon layers deposited by means of the conventional atmospheric pressure CVD method will be described below with reference to FIGS. 1(a) to 1(d). First of all, a non-monocrystalline silicon layer having a thickness of about 3000.ANG. is formed by the atmospheric pressure CVD method on a single crystal silicon substrate heated at about 500.degree. C. (FIG. 1(a)). Then, the substrate is heated to about 1400.degree. C. for crystallization and the resultant silicon layer is annealed at the temperature for about 2 to 8 hours (FIG. 1(b)). Subsequently, the substrate is cooled to the room temperature and washed with an acid solution to remove impurities. As a result, a silicon layer having crystallinity is formed (FIG. 1(c)). The silicon layer is then separated from the substrate to provide a semiconductor substrate. However, the above method has the disadvantage that the silicon layer having a thickness of about 3000.ANG. is crystallized on the substrate at a temperature as high as about 1400.degree. C. Accordingly, the substrate is thermally damaged and the service life of the substrate is shortened thereby. Another disadvantage of the above method is that a part of the silicon layer formed on the substrate is heated to a temperature as high as about 1400.degree. C. during the process for crystal growth. As a result, a twin fault is formed in the silicon layer, that is, a dislocation occurs in the silicon layer. If the

System Requirements For Adobe Photoshop CC 2015 Version 18:
