What's New In?

Taking pictures just got easier with Photo Organiser. Everything you need to organize, edit, share and present your photos with a variety of new features. With the continual development of the network technology, the utilization of the network in people's daily life and work becomes a common thing. The classic network in use is the Internet, which consists of network nodes, such as the Internet Protocol (IP) packet router and the Internet Service Provider (ISP), and the transmission line between the nodes. The IP packet router is a network device, which routes and forwards data between two users, usually on the basis of IP address information. The ISP is a service provider of the Internet, which provides people with the Internet access. The main network function is to transmit data, that is, the data transmission network is passive. When a data transmitting end wishes to transmit data to an opposite end, the data transmitting end must first transmit the IP packet to the IP packet router to find the destination IP address of the opposite end. After the IP packet router finds the destination IP address, the IP packet is decoded to obtain the IP address of the opposite end and then delivered to the ISP to find the opposite end. In the event that the opposite end is accessed by a plurality of users, the data transmitting end can transmit the IP packet to the IP packet router for searching, and the IP packet router will use the IP address of the IP packet to determine which IP packet is to be delivered to which IP address. However, when the IP packet router determines the IP address of the IP packet, there are different IP packets with the same IP address and the IP packet router is unable to distinguish between them and is thus unable to decide which IP packet is delivered to which IP address. To solve the problem that the IP packet router is unable to distinguish between a plurality of IP packets with the same IP address, it is generally required to use the IP address to guarantee the identification of the IP packet, and the ISP is used to guarantee the IP packet identification by using the IP address. If the IP address is used for the purpose of identification, it is required for a user to apply for an IP address, and the ISP is used to apply for the IP address by providing services of IP address management. However, it is necessary to introduce an extra entity, i.e. the ISP, to the network for the purpose of identifying the IP packet. In addition, the unnecessary introduction of the IP address also impacts on the user's network life and creates a
