However, these mechanisms can fail leading to the development of airway inflammation. This inflammatory process is largely mediated by sensory nerves and, when they are activated, can induce potent inflammatory responses in the airways, which include the release of many pro-inflammatory mediators such as histamine, proteases, and nitric oxide. Most of these inflammatory mediators can also be released from other cells such as epithelial and endothelial cells. Both sensory nerves and the other cells mentioned can interact with one another in various ways. For example, the epithelium can release mediators that cause sensory nerves to be activated. In turn, sensory nerves can also release mediators that activate the epithelium. In this way, a positive feedback loop may develop. This review considers the mechanisms that allow sensory nerves and non-neuronal cells to interact with one another. This will include an overview of the many cellular and molecular mediators that are released by cells, an analysis of the ways in which these mediators can cause other cells to respond and also an examination of the important role that sensory nerves play in providing both positive and negative feedback for each other.Lectionary 94 Lectionary 94, designated by siglum $\ell$ 94 (in the Gregory-Aland numbering) is a Greek manuscript of the New Testament, on parchment. Palaeographically it has been assigned to the 13th century. Scrivener designated it by 781 (in Gregory's numbering). Description The codex contains lessons from the Gospel of Luke 1:1-12:20 on 184 parchment leaves (). The lessons are divided according to the Ammonian Sections. The text is written in Greek large letters, in two columns per page, in 14 lines per page, in a uncial hand. History

Scrivener and Gregory dated the manuscript to the 13th century. It has been assigned by the Institute for New Testament Textual
