While the majority of MikroTik options are configured by a RouterOS command, there are a few that are configurable from CLI. Within the router, the default 'root' user accounts typically have limited privileges and do not include sufficient permissions to modify settings. To modify or administer many of the router settings and features from the CLI, you will need to change from the default user account on the target system ('root'). Either add the user account to a CLI privileged group or use a dedicated user account with a different name (e.g. 'mikrotik') and password (to ensure that 'mikrotik' will not share a password with other accounts).
