Oracle-MySQL Sync is an effective application that can perform bi-directional synchronization between Oracle and MySQL databases. It is a handy tool that allows you to synchronize tables between the two databases with just a few clicks. A plus of the application is its wizard-based approach that eliminates the need for backup and migration. Source Oracle-

MySQL Sync Review: The application is a good choice for two-way database synchronization and it is able to sync tables in a user-friendly way. With its wizard-based approach, the application is extremely easy to use. For both Oracle and MySQL, the application provides a list of the selected tables, which allows the user to sync them with a single click. The application allows to perform synchronization in both ways, but the bi-directional approach is recommended since it is much easier and faster. When using the incremental synchronization feature, the application will create a new set of tables in both databases based on the differences between the two, which eliminates the need to migrate data. In addition to the migration, the application also offers the option to backup Oracle tables at the same time as the synchronization. This is not the case with MySQL, where you need to take backups after the initial synchronization is complete. The application requires the user to provide a database server name, a database name and the username and password. It also needs the host, the port, and the database name and the user name and password. Overall, the Oracle-MySQL Sync application is a good choice for both Oracle and MySQL database synchronization, since it provides a wizard-based approach that makes the database synchronization simpler and faster. Is this new product really needed?
