Description: Who, What, When and Where. The five keys to proper cinematography. In this first of the five-part series, c. Dr. Joseph V. Mascelli of the University of Illinois presents the first three of the five keys to proper cinematography, or the art of, as he refers to it, “making it all look good”: “Who?”, “What?” and “When?”. He also answers the question, “Where?”, and gives examples of each, as well as delineating the differences between cinematography and film production. 2 This is an electronic document and may contain a Digital Rights Management (DRM) .Q: react native: KeyCode.DELETE not working in this case I have an application where I have to handle a delete button. The case is as follows: A user navigates to a given contact using a button in the list view. Once the user has selected the contact and presses the button the details view shows up. The user clicks on the 'x' next to the row in the list. Now the problem is if the user clicks outside the row, the detail view hides. The user then has to select another contact and press the button to return to the contact list and select the same row again and click on 'x' to return to the detail view. So the problem with this approach is even if the user clicks on the 'x' outside the row, the detail view does not get destroyed. The user can still select another contact and return back to that detail view (because the delete button also triggers the detail view). My code is as follows:

Tuesday, 30 January 2010 'The Kids' Best Other Information Would Know' I was thinking about Christmas and we were not doing any kind of a gift exchange. I didn't enjoy Christmas. I didn't enjoy the parties. There was a lot of over-enjoyment and a lot of stress around the joy. I enjoyed Hanukah more and I enjoyed Christmas a bit more this year in the sense that everyone was working very hard and there were no time pressures. Over the holiday, I kept thinking about who in my life might enjoy a bookish Christmas and I'd like to write a list for them. But I've been stopping myself from blogging and generally spewing my thoughts (as usual) because I don't want to have a list that people might actually read and it would feel like toosh too much like commercialism and maybe the holiday is about hanging out with friends, eating great food, with families, and not working. I have some thoughts on the idea of 'the kids' Christmas and a few of my own kids have been lobbying for a bookish Christmas for a while. One of them wrote in a story "we can celebrate Christmas and be reading books too!" "The kids" have some of the same things on their mind as me. "How to make friends when I have no friends?" "How to deal with feeling alone?" "How to be my best self?" "How to find the good in people?" "How to help the people around me and give to the people who help me?" I put together some points for them about how to approach people. The first thing about Christmas for me is being in a very different place. My beliefs are in flux. I have new thoughts about certain things. I'm finding a more spiritual place where I don't 3da54e8ca3
