Studying the National Social Health Insurance Program's impact on the provision of health services to rural older adults: Two-staged generalized ordered logit/negative binomial model. To investigate the impact of a national health insurance program on primary health care utilization and health outcomes of rural older adults in Guangxi, China.

A large-scale quasi-experimental study of the National Social Health Insurance Program (NSHIP) was conducted in 49 counties of China, and a two-staged generalized ordered logit model and a two-staged generalized ordered logit/negative binomial model were used to analyze the data. The effectiveness of the NSHIP in improving primary health care services of rural older adults was evaluated. The survey was conducted in rural Guangxi Province, China, at baseline (2013) and following a random, within-cluster treatment allocation, at follow-up (2014). The enrollment of rural elderly individuals in NSHIP was achieved as planned. In the overall sample, the monthly medical expenditure (MME) per person of rural older adults decreased from ¥1,118.5 to ¥539.9, and the trend was more obvious for the annual per person MME (¥10,345.8 in 2013 vs. ¥4,798.1 in 2014). The self-reported mean health of rural older adults improved from 3.56 to 3.84, and the perceived health status of rural older adults tended to increase. The enrollees in the NSHIP were more likely to receive primary health care services than the non-enrollees (odds ratio [OR] = 1.01, 95% confidence interval [95% CI]: 1.02-1.03). The study suggested that health insurance was positively associated with greater utilization of primary health care, a trend that was particularly strong among the rural elderly (OR = 1.02, 95% CI: 1.02-1.03). The results of the study contribute to the literature on China's health care system reform and provide policy-relevant evidence to support the implementation of the NSHIP to improve primary health care utilization in rural China. was
