The Pen tool works in a very similar way to the regular brush tool, in that you can select pixels and apply effects to them. With pen tools, though, you can do things like create one-pixel lines or move the Pen tool to draw a full-colour rectangle. Brushes allow you to create a variety of effects by using various settings and techniques. The Brush Drop-Down Menu feature enables you to access a series of options that let you control how a Brush renders, such as the settings available for gradients and patterns. The Pen tool also offers several different techniques for creating and manipulating objects. You can apply effects with Pen filters and choose which brush to use for an effect. 01 of 07 Paint Bucket The Paint Bucket allows you to fill an object and change it's colours and transparency. You can also draw shapes with the Paint Bucket and resize them. The Paint Bucket is great for applying effects to objects and for creating new images by painting on top of existing ones. Photoshop's Gradient tool also makes it simple to create and adjust gradients. You can use the Gradient tool to create horizontal and vertical patterns, as well as make simple linear gradients. You can also draw freely using the Gradient tool, which enables you to create shapes or shapes and colours that you can assign gradients to. Photoshop makes it easy to create and work with groups. A group is a collection of objects that can be moved together or separated. 06 of 07 Clone Stamp The Clone Stamp tool lets you either cut out objects or copy them from one area of the image onto another, making it a valuable tool for repairing damaged images. The Clone Stamp can also copy sections of images or layers onto other images. This tool can create accurate and bold results, but it can also be a little time-consuming if you need to retouch a large image. Photoshop's Align Image feature allows you to position objects in an image in several different ways, making it a great tool to adjust images so they fit together. This can help create custom templates for websites or other images that can be shared on the web. 08 of 07 Create, Modify, and Manipulate Image Files Photoshop makes it easy to create, modify, and manipulate image files. but one of the biggest hurdles is the reliance of bus fares across Scotland. There is a restricted range of buses that travel to schools, and as a result, the school day ends quickly and families are faced with the decision as to whether they can wait out the bus journey or risk missing the last bus home. Another possibility is investing in the southside depot, where employers can bring buses in from south Edinburgh and park them out of the way on nearby Dumbgill Drive. "We're clear, if you want to make investment in the schools, we're not opposition," says Maud. "We support the schools to get the buses they need, to get the benefits that buses bring them, but the buses need to have better, and more links on the routes." In 2005, the Edinburgh Transport Committee announced funding of £10.4 million per year to meet the capital cost of building new schools – an amount that had risen from £5.8 million in 1995. However, the capital funding was just for schools under construction and once they were finished, the annual maintenance budgets would have to be met by grant funding. Unlike student transport, where the maintenance is provided by the local education authority, maintenance is decided on a case-by-case basis. "What happened was, the maintenance of those schools was not adequately funded. There was no rhyme or reason to which schools were being upgraded and enhanced," says Maud. Having a comprehensive, integrated transport system, giving all children the same right to access the greatest education possible, is the only answer." Other proposals include a £250 million investment to enable all schools to meet the government's new sustainable transport plan by 2020, in order to overcome bottlenecks in links between schools. It also includes a new vehicle to replace the ageing 74 buses serving the school system, and new delivery software to provide more streamlined and effective bus journeys. The system is not without its fair share of detractors, however, with the transport committee's chair, Councillor Gordon Matheson, suggesting that free school transport across Scotland could hit road use more than it improves the education. "Just because you give buses to parents doesn't mean that people are not going to go to work and drive their cars. These are not the messages that we want to send.◆
