Q: Change Google Chrome Userscript to work with Non-Injected HTML I recently switched to Firefox for development, but switched back to Google Chrome to do all final testing on my code before submission. I had a userscript installed in Chrome before and I was able to install a similar script in FireFox and modify it to work on non-injected HTML without the code changing too much. The userscript currently has a section where the userscript interacts with iframes, and I'd like to know how I can make it so that userscript works with non-injected HTML. Here is the code I'm currently using to create the iframe: `top.location.href = "about:blank"; var container = document.createElement("div"); container.style.cssText = "z-index: 11;"; container.setAttribute("id", "Container"); container.setAttribute("class", "container"); container.setAttribute("style", "display:none;position:fixed;z-index: 9999;top:25px;left:25px;background-color:white;width:1000px;height:1000px;"); document.body.appendChild(container); var iframe = document.createElement("iframe"); iframe.setAttribute("id", "iframe"); iframe.setAttribute("src", "about:blank"); document.body.appendChild(iframe);` Is there a way that I can get this to work with non-injected HTML, rather than injecting the HTML into the document? A: You can use the dev tools and paste in the script into the top frame and see what changes will be made. That's the best way to see what will happen to your iframe. I also suggest you do the following before pasting your script in the dev tools: Open the script in a text editor Go to the top of the script and hit ctrl+a (select all) Delete the text, then ctrl+v (paste in to dev tools).

Here it is: What is the value of x when $|y - 5| = 0$? I have looked up that x is the average of y and -5 If $|y - 5| = 0$, does that mean that y and -5 are equal? I don't understand why I need to use this: $|y - 5| = 0$. And how to solve for x when y is a positive and negative number? A: The line $y = 5$ is parallel to the line $y = -5$, so the point where they meet is $(5, -5)$. From the point $(5, -5)$ on each side you can draw the line $y = \pm 5$, and the point where those two lines meet is $(0, 0)$. The major aim of the proposed research is to extend our previous work which demonstrated that human breast cancer cells synthesize and secrete considerable amounts of parathyroid hormone (PTH)-related peptide (PTHrP) and that
