

Display Power Off Utility is a small, simple easy to use specially designed to enable you to power off desktop or notebook displays. As you probably hinted, the application addresses those who want to save some cash as the app turns off the monitor or launches a screensaver to help preserve energy. You can either just launch the tool as is or if you prefer, you can configure it to be displayed in the System Tray so you can easily access it whenever necessary. The tool can be considered an alternative to turning off your monitor manually and can be especially useful for Windows 10 users since this particular operating system does not include a convenient keyboard shortcut for this purpose. Of course, if you are not an adept of adding more applications to your system, you can always consider automating the screen to turn off. To be more precise, you can access the Power & Sleep from the System and Settings menu and go for the Screen section. Here, you should be able to view an option that lets your screen turn off after 5 minutes or less under On battery mode settings. This can be especially useful for laptops since the battery lasts solely for a few hours. Display Power Off Utility
