Valentino Rossi is interested in testing for Honda at Aragon, should Yamaha decide to give the Italian its CRT bikes again. The 43-year-old nine-time world champion first tested for the Japanese manufacturer's MotoGP team in 2003 and 2004, with both tests taking place in Spain, before joining Yamaha in 2007. In the same years Rossi also tested with the satellite bike outfit Honda's CRT machine, two of which have now been acquired by the factory team. Honda has confirmed that the CRT bikes are now its primary machine, but there's been a lack of testing for the bikes from last season, meaning there has been little to no preparation from Rossi and his team. The seven-time world champion has been linked to a test for Ducati and also with helping Ducati find a new team, but his first choice would be to ride at the Spanish track. "If Honda wants to give me a test, of course I'm very, very happy. I had a good time there when I tested in 2003, 2004 and 2007," Rossi said. "I remember that I was happy to test there, because it's a good track, with good grip. I don't
