Adobe Photoshop Lightroom is a professional version of Photoshop that allows you to import, edit, organize, and retouch images. It is designed to be more intuitive to use than Photoshop. Adobe Photoshop Creative Cloud is both a graphic design tool and a personal photo editing tool. It is designed to help you make the most out of your image files, much like Photoshop. The Free Typeface is a collection of over 400 carefully selected fonts, the bulk of which are designed to be used at large sizes. These fonts come in all the popular coding formats, including SVG, scalable vector graphics, and WebP. View instructions Visit the Google Font Directory. Scroll down to 'Download'. Those who lead marathon swimming, triathlon, ultra-running or bike racing know how high an athletes' heart rate goes over the course of the race (or longer event). But a new study from Jogging Times suggests that heart rate might also be important in judging how good runners are at running. The study, out this month, used biometric sensors to measure the heart rates of runners who completed a marathon. (Biometric sensors track a variety of physical parameters including heart rate.) The researchers measured heart rate and running speed at the beginning and end of the race and analyzed the results to see how heart rate matched the pace. The researchers found that the faster runners had higher heart rates at the end of the race. And slower runners had lower heart rates. This doesn't mean slow runners are slower. But it does mean that running speed (oxygen consumption) might not be the best metric for comparing runners' abilities. "Runners typically will match perceived effort with their heart rate," explains one of the researchers, John Trevena, of Victoria University of Wellington, New Zealand. He is co-author of the study. In addition, high heart rates are linked to an increase in injuries. Overusing a muscle, for example, can lead to injury. But it may be too soon to tell exactly how heart rate compares to how good a runner really is. The study included only the best 40 runners in the race, which made the results difficult to interpret. Other studies, though, have looked at runners of all skill levels in a race or marathon and have found that lower heart rates predicted finishing time. And in a series of cross-country skiing races, runners with higher heart rates came in last. So it's possible that heart rate is a useful indicator of race performance, or that better runners have more efficient heart-burn. But beyond its value in judging how fast a runner is going, heart rate could be useful in helping runners pace themselves. As the researchers note, your heart rate is also a helpful indicator of how hard you're working. And though your physical exertion can't be precisely measured, heart rate can be a nice proxy. So when you're training for a race (or working out), it's a good idea to get your heart rate under control, even if you're running slow. Note If you prefer, you can also use the keyboard shortcuts \mathbb{B} -[(Mac) and CTRL+[(Windows) to open the Brush or Paint bucket tool and then select a brush or pen tool from the preset tools. In Figure 1.7, I've selected the Brush (Expression) category so that I can select brushes by type. In this example, I've chosen the Eraser brush (shown in Figure 1.8) so that I can demonstrate different options with a brush. FIGURE 1.7 FIGURE 1.8 As you can see in Figure 1.7, brushes are organized according to the type. Each brush can be resized, opened, and saved, and for some, you can create custom shapes as well. Most brushes are comprised of a variety of settings.
