should I be lifting? A: I don't think there is any set of rules. There's so many individual variations (and parts of the body that need to be trained) that many people recommend a variation that works best for them. For example, if you lift with a traditional collar bar, some people feel it makes your back stronger if you use the straight bar. (The straight bar is when your elbows go directly under the bar, and the collar bar is when they are elevated out from the bar.) If you have narrow shoulders, some recommend using a "H" frame barbell, (which is wider), and some think wide shoulder bars are better. If you are looking for a "brand", you may want to check out professional powerlifters: most powerlifting competitions use the Smith machine (from the Smith company) as a barbell or leg press. Be sure to check with the local club to see if they offer a smith machine, or if they have a used one you could use. Otherwise, you could go with a Walmart or sports store as they have a good selection of "powerlifting" bars on the rack. (If you have a strong back, and are interested in lifting to your limits, you may wish to use the power rack for benching and deadlifting instead. But I find the Smith machine to be a better investment (and less leg pain during back squats)).
