KEYMACRO is a freeware utility for remote and local Mac users. With its intuitive and easy-to-use interface, this application allows you to automate repetitive tasks, and makes the computer keyboard a more powerful programming tool. The application is designed to help you create a "macro", a script that executes a series of actions when a certain key is pressed or released. The most common actions performed by such scripts include saving a file or transferring a file to an FTP site. The text to be typed can be stored in any standard text document, and multiple macros can be linked together using special characters. However, macros can only be saved as plain text files. KEYMACRO also enables you to "reverse" a macro, so it can be used for repeating an action whenever a key is released. This is useful for key bindings, such as the Command key, which is often used to switch between different windows. To reverse a macro, you have to create a text file with the same name as the macro you want to "reverse", and then select "Change Macro" from the "Tools" menu. The application can save macros to plain text files, or to filetypes such as HTML or XML files. KEYMACRO can run scripts remotely and locally, and integrates with AppleScript, allowing it to be used as a built-in script interpreter. Keyboard Shortcuts: The application can be set to activate a macro on the following keyboard shortcuts: Control + Option + F, F, Control + Option + C, C, Control + Shift + F, Shift + F, Control + Shift + C, Shift + C and Control + F1, F1, as well as the standard F1, F2, F3, F4, F5, F6, F7, F8, F9 and F10 keys. Input Path: Input Path allows you to type text directly into the "Input Field". This function is particularly useful for such actions as searching, entering and editing URLs, and for copying and pasting text between documents. When you create a new document, the application will automatically generate a new Input Field, at the position where you wish to type in text. You can then type your text directly into the input field using any standard text editor. Once the text has been typed, the input field will automatically display the result, and move the cursor to the position 1d6a3396d6
