As it was expected, the additional deuteron channels have a great influence on the cross section. In particular, the $pp \to dd$ channel is almost two times as big as the cross section of the $pn \to ppd$ process. We obtain also a big enhancement for the $pp \to dd$ channel from the $pp\to nnd$ one. For the total cross section, the influence of the additional channels on the He-nucleus cross section is less clear. The channels with the dd system (in particular the $pp \to dd$) lead to some decrease of the total cross section. This is most likely caused by a depletion of the d-wave in the continuum spectrum of the final state. A noticeable difference between the dd and pn cases is that the dd cross section has a strong forward peak. This is explained by the fact that in the considered channels there are only two nucleons in the final state, while in the pn case there is also a p from the initial channel. Due to the absence of the other nucleons, the cross section has a strong maximum at the zero value of the momentum transfer. ![The ${}^{2}\!H$-nucleus differential cross section as a function of the angle between the momentum transfer vector and the initial proton direction for the energies of 100 MeV, 500 MeV, 1 GeV and 5 GeV.[]{data-label="f9"}](fig9.eps){width="80mm"} Fig.
