Q: Stop Ubuntu displaying all processes in a list I have a laptop with Ubuntu 11.10 installed. All I ever want to do is to run one application at a time. However, whenever I open the applications, a long list of applications are displayed, with lots of unnecessary information and often quite annoying, such as the current uptime or memory usage. How can I stop Ubuntu from doing this? A: You can click the Applications icon on the panel to open the Applications menu, then click on the application you want to run and click the arrow to the right.

RiteWire Messenger is a photo sharing application designed to provide a means of sending and receiving messages and images over the Internet. The application lets you create an account on the website and you can then invite up to 8 friends to be in your network. The application is useful for sending images and videos, but not as a messaging app. The interface is rather plain and not very well designed. Screenshot: The friend list is accessed by selecting the avatar icon at the top right of the application. The user is then able to send a message, image or video. App Questions: - Is it useful as a messaging app? - Does the interface look good? - Is the friend selection process simple? - Is it fast? System Android OS: Android Download: Your Channel App - Information Guide - Shortcuts Download - ByteMe Recommendations Nitrocharge is an application which is designed to help you improve your learning skills. The application's interface is a bit confusing but you can set the application to auto-run or manually set the pace for you to use. The application is meant to improve your learning capacity and the application itself is rather simple. The training begins by displaying a list of words and you have to choose the word that you think has the same meaning. The application then places a dot next to the selected word and you are asked to identify the word. The application then highlights the word in green and if it identifies the word correctly you get a notification. If not, the application highlights the word in red and again you have to click on the word. The application then highlights the word in green if you are correct. In case you fail to choose the word correctly the application takes you to a separate screen where the words are arranged in random order. You are then asked to choose the word that you think has the same meaning as the rest of the list. When you finish the training mode you can select the number of times you want to repeat the training or choose a new session to begin. App Questions: - Is it useful as a learning tool? - Does the interface look good? - Is it easy to understand? - Is it free? System Android OS: Android Download: NeuroLink Download - ByteMe Recommendations Musicmatoolbox is a music player designed to help you expand your music collection. The application can be used to add and play songs in the background. There are several filters in the app including an artist, album and genre filter. The filters can be applied to the music list to generate a music list according to your preferences. You can then browse your library to find your favorite tracks. You can also see which songs are playing when you open the application. If you select a song you can play it
