There are so many potential math games that you can even build your own to be played in class or with your students. So, why not try it out? The Story Driven Puzzle Game Using our story-driven puzzle game, you'll be able to create colorful and unique math puzzles that you can share with your students. Your students can then easily follow the steps and trace the line where the pieces have to be added. This colorful puzzle is one of the most recognized functions. The triangular platform and the square with the three holes can be used to organize and solve problems. This function is also very popular to reveal math secrets to the community because of its complicated structure, which is very hard to understand at first sight. Moreover, the triangular platform with three pieces can be used to solve word problems because the added pieces fit into the gaps with the greatest possible ratio. The solution table with the added pieces shows that the remaining pieces must be positioned to form a square. You can also use the combination of the square and the pentagon to create an equation solving game. Here, you can find out how to solve and add square numbers by thinking ahead! Make the most out of the number system and the Greek letters The number system is the most fundamental part of math and is often used in all other math areas. And yet, there are more than 50
