A sensitive, simple, rapid and specific high-performance liquid chromatography-electrospray mass spectrometric method for the simultaneous determination of 10 beta-carboline derivatives (N-methyl-3-methoxycarbonyl- and N-ethyl-4-methoxycarbonyl-9-nitro-1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8-octahydro-10H-carboline) has been developed and validated. A liquid-liquid extraction with ethyl acetate was applied and the analytes were determined on a C18 column with a mobile phase composed of a mixture of (formate buffer)/acetonitrile (1:1, v/v) with 0.1% of formic acid. Selected ion monitoring (SIM) was used for quantification. The method was linear over the range of 5-50 ng/ml. The precision was lower than 7.5% and the accuracy was between 96 and 102% for all compounds. Stability tests, including incubation at room temperature for up to 48 h and at freeze-thaw cycles, demonstrated that the proposed method is robust for the determination of these beta-carboline derivatives in human plasma. The applicability of the developed method was verified in a forensic case study, in which 10 beta-carboline derivatives were measured in the plasma of the victim and five suspects. The levels of beta-carbolines in the victim and two of the suspects were in agreement with those of other studies, suggesting that the analyzed metabolites could be present in human tissues and that they may reflect the influence of factors, such as the type of diet consumed, the use of drugs

In particular, the invention relates to apparatus and methods for aligning the axes of several interconnected cylinders to a common reference point, or set of points. It is often necessary to produce a curved surface on a flat sheet, such as a metal sheet or a piece of leather. For example, in the automotive industry, many components, such as trim panels, doors, hoods, fenders, and the like, are produced by way of stamping or otherwise forming a sheet metal. In particular, the sheet metal is generally stamped or otherwise formed into a desired shape. To produce the desired curved surface, several pieces of sheet metal are generally simultaneously stamped. The pieces of sheet metal are placed in a frame, with their axes aligned to a common reference point, so that they may be simultaneously stamped. Thus, during the stamping of the several pieces of sheet metal, the axes of each piece of sheet metal are aligned to a common reference point. Similarly, it is often necessary to provide a curved surface on a piece of leather, such as a glove, or on a piece of upholstery. To produce the desired curved surface, a flat piece of leather, or piece of upholstery is generally coated with a thin layer of a suitable adhesive. The piece of leather or upholstery with the adhesive thereon is placed in a frame, with its axes aligned to a common reference point, so that the adhesive can be simultaneously applied to the piece of leather or upholstery. Thus, during the application of the adhesive, the axes of the piece of leather or upholstery are aligned to a common reference point. Thus, when a plurality of pieces of sheet metal or a piece of leather or upholstery is to be simultaneously stamped or coated with adhesive, it is necessary to simultaneously stamp or coat the plurality of pieces of sheet metal or piece of leather or upholstery, with the axes

AWS::AppStream::Layer is a way for a user to use AWS resources like CloudFormation, S3, CloudWatch, and Elastic Beanstalk to create applications. When you use AWS::AppStream::Layer, AWS creates a layer to be used with your application that has been preconfigured to use resources from AWS. An AWS::AppStream::Layer is used in place of a user creating resources on their own in order to reduce operational overhead. When you add AWS::AppStream::Layer to an application, AWS creates resources for you based on the layer you have selected. AWS::AppStream::Layer includes default configuration settings for AWS CloudFormation templates, and provides an easy way for you to create layers and apply them to applications. To create an AWS::AppStream::Layer resource, specify the name of the layer, any actions associated with the layer, and the namespace that the layer applies to. The namespace is the parent stack of the layer. When you create a layer, it is associated with its own AWS::CloudFormation::Stack resource and you can then select the stack to which you want to apply the layer. For more information, see Specifying an AWS::CloudFormation::Stack for a Layer (This tool helps you to copy all your social media accounts' details including username, password, profile picture, cover picture, number of friends, etc. to your PC from Android phones.
