Tunisian Arabic (TN), the official language of Tunisia, is an Arabic dialect of the Maghrebi Arabo-Berber (a sub-branch of the Maghrebi Arabic language) variety spoken mostly in Tunisia and a number of surrounding countries. The Arabic dialects of Tunisia are Aja and Sahili dialects, the latter of which is also spoken in Algeria. Unlike the Arabic dialects of Algeria and Egypt, the dialects of Tunisia are closer to the varieties of Morocco and Libya than to that of Egypt.Q: Could not load file or assembly 'Microsoft.Practices.Prism.Unity' or one of its dependencies I have an application that worked perfectly fine. So, everytime a request is received, I create a folder in the Azure storage account, store the file there and add an object to that folder. Now, I need to implement some kind of Restore function in this application. Basically, I need to find out, what storage object was the source of the file I am trying to restore. Also, if there was one, I need to know what the path was. I tried the GetObjectsAsync method, but the object which is returned here just consists of a collection of all storage folders, which means that this method is not very efficient. Is there any other way, for instance, which Azure Cloud Shell could be of help? Any help is appreciated! A: You can get the URI of the file you are seeking to restore by running the following command: Get-AzureStorageFile -InputObject $inputObject Then, the Location property of the file is likely what you are after. In your case, if the object was found in your app's file-system, you would retrieve the URI of the file by way of the path of the file in the object. If you know the storage account
