Folding into a well-defined conformation was achieved for poly(3-alkylthiophenes) with a peptide back-bone (PA-3PT) via a radically controlled polymerization/fragmentation strategy. The methodology relies on the progression of polymerization at room temperature and fast cooling to induce the formation of short poly(PA-3PT) oligomers that spontaneously segregate into π -stacked oligomer (compounds 1) and worm-like micelle (compound 2) structures. By simply tuning the alkyl side chain length, from a short alkyl chain (compound 1a) to a long alkyl chain (compound 2a), we demonstrated that the conformational behavior of PA-3PT polymers, where polymer chain conformation is entirely defined by the alkyl side chain length, is dependent on alkyl chain length. Furthermore, when short oligomers were heated in organic solvents, a conformational change from π -stacked oligomer (compounds 1b and 2b) to helix-like polymer (compound 1c) was also achieved. Thermal and optical properties of the polymers were studied, and it was observed that the thermal stability of the polymers increased as the alkyl chain length increased.Glucocorticoid-induced osteoporosis in the rat. In several studies the bones of rats treated with glucocorticoids were studied for evidence of secondary degenerative osteoporosis. In these studies, neither cortisone acetate nor dexamethasone was given at doses comparable with treatment of men with Cushing's syndrome. In our studies, two methods of inducing osteoporosis were used. In one study, 0.9% saline was given by gavage once daily for 570a42141b
