My current Facebook account is pretty much set up to let me only talk to people I already know, I use my activity log to read people's status updates but most of the time I just scroll through without anything interesting showing up. However every so often, for example today, it's put up a status update about a day on the beach with my friends; something I'd love to do one day but I don't get to very often.The thing is, I have no problem with Facebook. I genuinely enjoy the social aspect of it, I love chatting with people, and I think it's a good use of time to keep in contact with people I know but I just don't really feel like Facebook gives me much in return. As an example of this I've been reading the Facebook API's and have been working on a project that allows people to browse through the profiles of their friends; all the users profiles are public but the app lets you choose which of your friends' profiles to look at, and since this has been in the works for a while it's got a bit of customization for privacy issues. When I add a friend to the list and view their profile it's very similar to how it appears to people on Facebook, it's a mix of personal and work related information but the work related is in a much more limited context.I'm not sure if my opinion of Facebook is a minority opinion but I just don't feel like I'm being used for much and I can't decide if that's
